The COVID-19 pandemic has shown us that students need social, emotional, mental, and academic support now more than ever. This three-week program is designed to support the efficacy skills of students and will include diagnostic evaluation using IXL data to identify academic deficiencies. This class will also introduce students to learning and applying the concepts of self-awareness, self-management, and self-efficacy to support their growth and success in and out of the classroom. Students will explore and practice these competencies and conclude the course with a foundation for the next school year. The topics that will be uncovered during the sessions will be healthy mind and body, grit and growth mindset, IRL interaction and connection, managing stress and anxiety, and awareness of self and others/perspective-taking/empathy.
